

Richard joined Lansons in early 2010 as a board director to establish its regulatory consulting practice and advise a wide range of clients on regulatory issues, problems and opportunities. He began his career in the civil service focusing mainly on various aspects of consumer protection policy and latterly as a senior insurance regulator. He has worked as head of life and pensions at the Association of British Insurers (dealing mainly with reputational consequences resulting from pensions mis-selling) and, in 2002, set up a successful regulatory consultancy for a City law firm.
